

March 13, 2009

Renters Get Peer Advice from RentWiki.com

RentWiki.com, a peer review and recommendation Web site that helps people find a place to live, has added Twitter feeds that encourage conversation between people looking for a home and those who can answer the question, "What's the area really like?"

"The goal of RentWiki is to give people searching for a place to live real advice from renters living in that area. By integrating with Twitter, we are expanding the conversation beyond just our site and into the real-time social web," said Eric Wu, co-founder of RentWiki.

RentWiki centers on posted reviews by current and former residents. It is integrated with Facebook, which allows users to upload videos and discuss housing and neighborhoods at greater length.

COMMUNICATIONS®

Marketing Communications & Media Relations